Introduction to the sixth edition

This sixth edition of African Books in Print (ABIP) lists 33,261 titles in print as at the end of 2005, from 893 publishers and research institutions with publishing programmes, in 45 African countries. This compares with 31,684 titles included in the 5th edition.

This edition of ABIP comprises:

- 1 all books listed in the fifth edition (2000) that are still in print;
- 2 all titles listed from volume 18, no. 1 (1992) through volume 32, no. 1 (2006) of the quarterly African Book Publishing Record (ABPR) (approximately 10,750 new titles from volumes 26, no.1 through volume 32/1) and,
- 3 approximately 1,550 titles not previously listed in either ABIP or ABPR.

The objective of ABIP is to provide a systematic, reliable and functional reference resource and selection tool for African-published material currently in print and which aims to be as comprehensive as possible.

The African book publishing industry is volatile and in the six years since the publication of the last edition of ABIP there have been some important changes and developments. The increased availability of access to the internet in terms of use of email and the creation of websites has changed the way African publishers can communicate and the way in which business is done. Even just in the past couple of years, the number of African publishers setting up their own websites - and even publishing directly online - has increased enormously. So too has the quality of these sites. Another change can be seen in the growth of co-publication where one or more publishers combine resources to publish texts together. Access to information in francophone Africa has been greatly facilitated by various internet initiatives sponsored by l'Agence de la francophonie in France. So, although there are many resources readily available to those who are interested in African publishing - catalogues, listings, websites, distributors - only African Books in Print (and its sister journal The African Book Publishing Record) brings all these materials together to provide, in a clearly laid-out and easily accessible format, a comprehensive view of in-print material published in Africa in a single source.

Every effort is made to ensure the accuracy of information provided but it is clear that some information such as price, will already be out of date due to price changes or currency exchange fluctuation.

Extensive revisions to the database have been made, with thousands of price changes noted and approximately 13,000 out-of-print titles, deleted. As at the end of 2005 the complete ABIP/ABPR database comprised more than 1,750 publishers, including commercial publishers, research institutions with publishing programmes, NGOs, professional associations, learned societies, university departments, institutes, or research centres producing occasional publications, or reports, etc. Of these publishers, about 1,350 had title records on file in the database, which have been listed in ABPR and/or in earlier editions of ABIP.

Data gathering and verification for the 6th edition

Data gathering from Africa continues to be fraught with many difficulties. In theory, the boom in the use and ready availability of internet access in Africa improves access to information. In practice, although many publisher websites are attractive and easy to use, quite a large proportion are not updated at all frequently and many do not display sufficient bibliographic information for our purposes. Some have no prices, others no page extents and frequently they do not mention dates of publication. Nevertheless, the principal change in data collection for this new edition of ABIP is the wide use of publisher website information for checking and updating entries where necessary, sometimes at the request of publishers and often where a publisher has not responded to requests for information. Wars and civil strife continue to present serious problems at all levels throughout Africa. It seems unreasonable to expect a publisher in a country enmeshed in civil war and faced with dreadful daily conditions of life, to be very interested in the updating of material for ABIP. On the other hand, it is heartening to find some books coming out of Rwanda and an increasing number from Congo Democratic Republic.

Unfortunately, although electronic communication may have improved, the same cannot be said of conventional postal services. Mailing services in Nigeria, for example, continue to be amongst the worst on the continent - one is never certain whether an item will arrive and if it does it can take months for a letter or package to reach its destination. Email is not exempt from problems either - publishers frequently change their addresses without letting us know and emails are buried in files just as easily as letters. Just a few days before final completion of ABIP, a well-known and respected publisher emailed to apologise for his lack of response and to ask if it were too late to be included. Happily this publisher has a website which had already proved useful.

Every publisher with records on file was mailed or emailed a computer printout, listing all their titles currently on the database, together with detailed instructions. Publishers were asked to check the printout for accuracy and completeness, to indicate price changes and other amendments, delete out-of-print titles, etc., and were also requested to supply full bibliographic details for any titles that were missing from the database. Those who failed to respond by the closing date received at least one, follow-up mailing, fax or email reminder.

We received a response from about 60% of publishers including a couple who had ceased trading and a handful of completely new publishers who had somehow heard about ABIP. Some of these publishers did as they were asked (but by no means all), some sent catalogues or referred us to their website. It seems that many (perhaps most) of the publishers who did not respond in any way are organisations who have only published one or two titles and are not publishers in any real sense.

It is still the case however, that for some publishers, there is still some out-of-date or incomplete data. And it is also true that coverage for certain countries (Sierra Leone, Liberia, Libya, Mauritania) is completely absent, while for others (Rwanda, Burundi, Congo-Brazzaville, the Gambia) coverage is at best patchy and at worst quite unsatisfactory.

The records of 460 publishers' files were deleted in their entirety. These are the publishers who did not update and verify title data for the 5th edition of ABIP published in 2000, did not respond to our mailings and information update requests for the new 6th edition, have not contributed information to ABPR between 2000 and 2006, or have informed us (often rather sadly) that they have ceased trading. A complete list of these publishers is included as a supplementary publisher directory entitled 'Deleted publishers' on p. xlv.

Acknowledgements

The editor wishes firstly to acknowledge the invaluable contribution of Hans Zell, editor of ABPR from its inception until 2002 and editor of the first five editions of ABIP. His is the guiding hand behind both the conception of ABIP and the classification system used. Without his dedication to African publishing this current edition of ABIP could not exist. Secondly, the editor thanks all those publishers in Africa who undertook the time-consuming task of providing and updating bibliographic information, and without whom this edition of African Books in Print could not have been produced. Finally, the editor is grateful to Sylvie Lomer, Brigitte Trister and Marc Willgoss for their assistance with database entry, typesetting and proofreading.

Scope and arrangement

Based on data supplied by African publishers, African Books in Print/Livres Africains Disponibles (ABIP) provides an index to African-published material currently in print – by author, title, and by subject. It covers titles in English, French and in African languages, as well as a few important titles in Portuguese (since 2003). ABIP does not cover material in Afrikaans or Arabic. In addition to books from commercial imprints, it includes publications from research institutions, learned societies, professional associations, NGOs, as well as publications available from university departments, libraries, or bookshops acting as distributors on behalf of university departments and institutes, and a few books self-published by authors.

The sole criterion for inclusion of a title in ABIP, regardless of content, is that it must have been published on the African continent or any of its offshore islands. The titles of multinational firms operating in Africa are included, but are limited to those books actually published under the imprint of a local African subsidiary or branch. ABIP lists books, pamphlets, reports and series (including irregular series), but not serials other than yearbooks or annuals. Pamphlets or reports with a page extent of less than 10 pages are generally not included. This edition covers titles in print in early 2006. Three major indexes are provided: by subject (volume I), and by author and title (volume II). Arrangement throughout is alphabetical. The index of subject and area headings, with several form divisions as applicable, also appears in a straightforward alphabetical sequence, and includes a substantial number of cross-references.

Data collection

Information, both for ABIP and the quarterly African Book Publishing Record (ABPR), is collected by means of regular mailings both by traditional mail and by email (in English and French) to a roster of publishers and research institutions, which currently consists of over 1,750 names and addresses. These are accompanied by 'Fact sheets for publishers', which describe bibliographic details required, closing dates for submitting data, etc. Publishers who fail to reply, submit incomplete data, or who do not meet deadlines are sent reminders. Title data is cross-checked, edited, classified and entered into the database.

The database used is the DOS-based Advanced Revelation 3.1, with word processing output to Microsoft Word. Typesetting was done in Adobe Pagemaker.

Publishers were sent an individual computer printout/edit list, including all titles on file from the fifth edition of African Books in Print, together with all those cumulated from African Book Publishing Record. Publishers were requested to check the edit lists for accuracy, delete out-of-print titles, indicate price changes and new editions, and add details of any missing titles. Approximately 60% of the publishers contacted responded and returned the lists, many of them also submitting a considerable amount of new information. Another 15% of publishers have websites which were consulted. In cases where the publisher had not corrected the computer list but had provided catalogue information, all entries were cross-checked for duplications, changes and additions which was extremely painstaking and time-consuming. However, this means that the bibliographic information from approximately 75% of publishers has been checked and updated as far as possible, either from information provided directly by the publisher or from information provided on publisher websites. Unfortunately, there were also once again a substantial number of publishers who failed to return the edit lists. These publishers are flagged with an asterisk * symbol in the directory of publishers. It follows that the availability status of titles from these publishers and institutions is uncertain and that information provided may be neither current nor complete. Some publishers may be no longer in business and/or actively trading.

New title records listed in ABPR volume 31 (2005), and volume 32, no. 1 (2006), were added to the merged database at final proofing stage, thus ensuring that the new 6th edition of ABIP is as up-to-date as possible.

Deletions and availability

More than 13,000 titles listed in the fifth edition were deleted from this sixth edition, following publishers' notification that they were out-of-print, because they have failed to verify information and update their listings for this edition, nor the previous fifth edition of ABIP, or have not supplied information to ABPR within the last 6 years. All these publishers appear in a separate listing of names on page xli.

Government and official publications

Government and official publications generally are not included, except for titles from certain quasi-autonomous government bodies with publishing programmes, e.g. Museums, Central Statistical Offices, university departments etc., who distribute books independently and not through government printers and publications agencies.

Classification and subject index

The Sears List of Subject Headings (New York: H. W. Wilson Co.) is used as the main thesaurus of classification of titles, modified and expanded to suit the particular needs of ABIP. The ABIP subject authority list currently includes a total of 7,500 subject headings.

We are reliant upon publishers' original information or descriptive data for classifying titles and there may be a small number of entries with subject classifications that are not absolutely correct or entirely consistent.

Sears provides no definite rules on subdividing by place or by subject, but the following classification policies generally apply:

(i) Entries under subject, subdivided by place and/or form:

Agriculture/Agricultural development (all aspects)
Anthropology
Archaeology
Architecture
Art/African art
Arts and crafts
Business, Management, Industry, Labor,
Trade unions, Employment
Church history, Christianity in Africa, Christian Missions
Ecology/Environment

Economics, Economic development, Finance
Geology, Mining, Mines and mineral resources
Health education, Public health, Nutrition
Housing and urban planning
Human rights
Languages and linguistics
Law (all areas)
Leisure and entertainment
Library sciences (other than bibliographies)
Life sciences
Medicine
Philosophy
Pure sciences
Sports
Technology, and applied sciences
Wildlife and conservation

(ii) Entries under place (i.e. geographic division, country or area) subdivided by subject and/or form:

Bibliographies, national Demography
Education (including Vocational education, etc.)
Geography
History
Local government
Natural history
Politics and government
Public administration
Religion (other than Missions, Christian; and Church history)
Rural development
Social sciences (all areas)
Theology
Travel and travel guides

General works on African topics are classified under subject first, regardless of their nature: for example, a book entitled Education in Africa today will appear under:

Education – Africa and not Africa – Education

whereas a title on the Nigerian educational system will be listed under place first, i.e.

Nigeria – Education

The following form divisions are used in addition to subject or place headings:

Addresses and essays
Atlases and maps
Autobiography
Bibliography
Bio-bibliography
Biography
Cartoons
Catalogues
Collections
Conversation and phrase books
Conversion tables
Diaries, letters
Dictionaries
Directories
Drama
Economic aspects
Encyclopaedias
Examinations, questions
Fiction

History and criticism
Indexes
Periodical indexes
Pictorial works
Poetry
Social life and customs
Statistics
Study and teaching
Study and teaching (Elementary)
Study and teaching (Secondary)
Study and teaching (Higher)
Travel
Yearbooks

Biographical and autobiographical titles in the subject index appear in the direct form under the name of the person treated. Titles in the African languages are classified in a simplified form as explained below.

Cross-references

An extensive system of cross-references is included as part of the subject thesaurus, using the following:

See also reference made to related form
See reference made from unused form

See also references are usually made from the general subject to more specific parts of it but there are exceptions. See also cross-references under country headings guide the user to individual ethnic groups of each country. Users of ABIP must also look for additional cross-references not only under general subject headings, but also under individual countries. Cross-references under certain African languages provide alternative orthographies or nomenclatures.

African literature and creative writing

This group is subdivided by the following form headings:

Bibliography
Folklore (including oral literature)
History and criticism
Collections
Fiction
Drama
Poetry

Francophone African literature is listed separately under these headings, as African literature in French.

There are several interpretations and definitions of just what is African literature and what makes an African writer 'African'. In ABIP the sections on African literature include not only black African writing, but also fiction, drama, and poetry by white South African writers and what is generally termed as 'South African English literature'. In some cases works by North African authors writing in French have been classified, somewhat arbitrarily, as 'African' literature, rather than as Arabic literature, for which there is also a separate heading.

The sixth edition of ABIP provides details of about 2,500 African literature titles in English (including critical studies), plus a further 1,000 titles in French.

Children's books

African Books in Print lists approximately 2,000 African-published children's books in English and French. These are listed under the general heading Children's literature and Children's literature in French, with the majority appearing under Children's literature, African or Children's literature in French, African. The rule has been to classify, as far as ascertainable (and sometimes a bit arbitrarily), all those children's books as 'African' whose stories include an African setting.

Sometimes it is difficult to distinguish between creative or imaginative writing, i.e. picture-story books, etc. and children's books with a more pedagogical content such as supplementary readers for English language teaching. Usually the latter are classified under English language—Study and teaching (Elementary) or (Secondary).

ABIP lists a substantial number of children's books in African languages, listed under their appropriate language heading, e.g. Zulu—School books, Readers, Children's literature.

Educational books, textbooks, and school books

Most texts and educational books are identified by the form heading Study and teaching (Elementary) and Study and teaching (Secondary), however certain educational courses overlap in level between final year of elementary education and first-year secondary courses. Entries under these two headings are strictly school books, whereas those that appear with the form heading Study and teaching are, for the most part, for tertiary-level education, although the form heading Study and teaching (Higher) also exists. Another form heading, Examinations, questions is also used for self-study and examination guides. Titles of school texts can sometimes be ambiguous; for example, a series of books entitled Secondary economics for West Africa may not be specifically about West Africa, but merely designed for West African syllabus requirements. A textbook of this nature would appear under the general Economics – Study and teaching (Secondary) heading and not under Economics – Africa, West – Study and teaching (Secondary).

African languages

Works (in English or French) about the various African languages – dictionaries, grammars, etc. – appear under the direct expression with form headings as appropriate, for example:

Amharic language – Dictionaries
Hausa language – Grammar

African ethnic groups

Books dealing with aspects of the social life, customs, history, etc., of specific African ethnic groups appear under the direct expression, with the words African people added in parentheses, plus form headings where applicable, for example:

Yoruba (African people) – Social life and customs
Luo (African people) – Law, customary

Books in African languages

Books in over 140 African languages are listed, a total of more than 10,000 titles, which represents a substantial increase over ABIP 5th ed. Those most heavily represented are Swahili, Zulu, Xhosa, Setswana, Shona, Ndebele, and Yoruba, Hausa and Igbo to a lesser extent. There are still considerable lacunae in the listings of several African languages.

All entries in any of the African languages are identified by their language codes, a key to which appears on page xv.

Titles in African languages are not classified by subject, but by a simplified form of sub-divisions as follows:

General and Non-fiction
Schoolbooks, Readers, Children's literature
Fiction, Drama, Poetry
Easy reading materials, Adult

Translations of titles in the African languages are given [in square brackets] wherever provided by publishers. Some publishers give descriptive rather than literal translations, since literal English translations are frequently difficult to provide. For technical reasons, it is not possible to print intonation marks and diacritic signs for titles in African languages. If there are typographical errors in the spelling of any material in African languages, we would be grateful if this could be brought to our attention, for correction in subsequent editions of ABIP.

Bibliographic data

A complete entry may include the following information:

- 1 Author(s), Editor(s) or Compiler(s) with initials
- 2 Title and subtitle
- 3 Translated title (for titles in African languages)
- 4 Translator note (if appropriate)
- 5 Edition, if other than first
- 6 ISBN (only for post 1998 titles)
- 7 Series (given in parentheses, where available; but primarily confined to numbered series)
- 8 Book, volume or part number, and total number of books, etc., in set
- 9 Number of pages
- 10 Details of illustrations, where included
- 11 Binding (if other than paper/soft-cover)
- 12 Price in local currency, and price(s), in US Dollars, UK Pound Sterling and/or Euros
- 13 Publisher abbreviation
- 14 Year of publication
- 15 Country code
- 16 Language code (if not in English)

All bibliographic data and prices given are subject to change and availability of books cannot be guaranteed. All books are paperback (soft-cover) unless otherwise indicated, i.e. "cd." (cased). As publishers have submitted data on new titles in series over a period of time, the series description is not always consistent, and may contribute to occasional minor inconsistencies in style and/or abbreviations for citation of series. Every effort is made to provide the fullest possible information for each title, however bibliographic data is unfortunately incomplete for a small proportion of entries, due to publishers' failure to supply complete bibliographic details, for example a number of titles appear without author initial(s).

Prices/editions

Prices are given in local currency, and a key to currency abbreviations follows this section, along with their approximate US Dollar, UK Pound Sterling and Euro equivalents.

Prices indicated in local currency for those publishers who failed to update and verify information (marked with an * asterisk in the Directory of Publishers) are likely to have changed. This applies in particular to listings of African language titles published in the 1980s that have not been updated.

Overseas prices are given in parentheses. For commercial and trade directories, or annual economic surveys, the latest edition of which we were notified is given, but more recent editions may have been published meantime. For some other entries, there is merely an indication 'Annual' together with a date when first published.

Directory of publishers

The majority of publishers' names appear in a shortened/abbreviated form and the directory of publishers provides full names and addresses, together with an identification of the abbreviation used. A number of publishers have changed their names or corporate structure (or have merged with other companies) since the fifth edition of ABIP was published. Titles from these publishers are listed with their new and current company names, but a number of cross-references in the directory of publishers will guide the user to their former names.

A small number of entries cover books published privately by their authors. The ordering addresses for these publications do not appear in the directory of publishers, but are given as part of the bibliographical data provided with the listing.
